

Emergency Medicine

During the 2022-2023 Academic Year, 89 percent of all emergency medicine residents participated in scholarly activities. Over half of the residents were involved in more than five scholarly activities in total. Emergency Medicine faculty guide the residents through their endeavors, but they also participate in activities of their own, including peer reviewing and research. Despite only making up approximately 23 percent of all residents, emergency medicine produced 33 percent of all scholarly activities that were completed in the academic year. Between core faculty and residents, 99 total scholarly activities were performed during the academic year.